

Description

Journals or funding organizations may require authors to submit supporting documents along with their manuscript or grant proposal. These supplemental documents fall under the “annex” or “appendix” sections. However, researchers often get confused between the two.

Annex

DEAD END

A standalone set of documents usually attached at the end of a research paper.

i

Provides important information that is relevant even outside the context of the research paper.

NEWS

Contains documents such as historical news articles, other scientist's lab reports, etc.

VS.

Appendix

A supplement or attachment to a research paper; not part of the body of the paper.

paperclip

Helps readers understand the essential background information.

graph

Contains detailed information such as sets of graphics, tables, raw data, etc.
