

Description

Merely publishing your article in a scientific journal is not enough. You need to publish it in a journal that has a great impact in your field and is not a predatory journal. Publishing in a high-impact journal does not happen overnight, and there are several factors that determine your rate of success. Through this checklist, we give you a list of considerations that you should keep in mind right through the initiation of the project to the selection of the journal to actually drafting the manuscript. We hope that this checklist helps you increase your chances of getting your manuscripts in high-impact journals.
