

Description

We are glad to announce that Chem-Station, the largest chemistry information portal in Japan, will now post language and grammar articles from Enago Academy (Japan).

Chem-Station provides unique information related to research industry updates in chemistry and related fields, including references, books, reagents, equipment, tools, and other useful information. Enago Academy is an academic information portal that provides a series of helpful English language and grammar tips in the context of research and science writing. It also publishes interviews with Japanese scientists and researchers, delving into the most important aspects of conducting research and writing a research paper. As a result of this collaboration, one of the most popular series of Enago Academy "Dr. Paquette's Academic English Tips for Beginners," which provides useful tips and preferences when writing in English, will now be available on Chem-Station.

We believe this partnership can facilitate the dissemination of chemistry knowledge and academic English tips by providing valuable information to researchers, scientists, professionals, academics, and students, thereby helping them develop practical expertise.
