New York, USA: Enago, a trusted name in the STM industry for English editing and publication support, has teamed up with the Global Fashion Conference (GFC) to help researchers in the fields of fashion studies perfect their abstracts, papers, and presentations pre- and post-submission to GFC.

Both Enago and the GFC Committee understand how difficult it is to achieve success in today's competitive academic environment. Through this partnership, authors can access Enago's world-renowned English copy editing services—at a discounted rate—to ensure that their content can stand up to scrutiny and adhere to conference guidelines with regard to both language and formatting.

The fifth international Global Fashion Conference will take place on 20th and 21st October at the University of Stockholm. Organized by Fast Forward Innovation (FFI) and the university's Centre for Fashion Studies, it is designed to promote innovation through a meeting of the academic and business worlds. This year's theme is "Tradition and Innovation: Challenges for Luxury and Fashion in the 21st century."

“Enago knows that the current scientific landscape requires researchers to follow strict guidelines and requirements to ensure that their research is published by organizations such as GFC,” said Tony O’Rourke, who manages Enago’s Europe & North America strategic alliances. “Our skilled team of copyeditors offer their expertise in not only helping authors meet submission requirements but also in perfecting the language with appropriate technical inputs to ensure their documents meet the current publication standards of the industry.”

Isabel Cantista, founder and CEO of FFI and President of the Scientific Committee at GFC 2016, also shared her thoughts on the partnership. “In order to promote the advancement of knowledge, it is key to communicate in an effective way, being clear and precise. This new collaboration supports all GFC participants to achieve that. We are thrilled that Enago has come on board to assist researchers and professionals from all over the world in sharing groundbreaking work.”
