

Description

In the ever-evolving landscape of academic research, the demand for open access publication has surged. Open access not only fosters the dissemination of knowledge but also enhances its accessibility to a global audience. However, open access publication often entails article processing charges (APCs) that researchers must grapple with. In response to this challenge, research funders and institutions worldwide have initiated policies to facilitate open access publishing and provide financial support to authors.

Navigating the intricacies of securing funding for open access publication can be a daunting task. It requires a clear understanding of your institution's policies, your funder's requirements, and the available funding sources. To aid researchers in this endeavor, we have crafted the "Guide to Secure Funding for Open Access Publication: A researcher's checklist."

This comprehensive checklist serves as your roadmap to successfully navigating the world of open access publication and securing the necessary funding. By following this checklist, researchers will gain invaluable insights into how to fund their open access publications in alignment with their institution and funder requirements. It provides essential information on finding the right journals, understanding APC funding sources, and meeting eligibility criteria.

As the research landscape continues to transform, this guide ensures that you are well-prepared to share your findings with the world through open access publication, breaking down barriers to knowledge dissemination and promoting the open exchange of ideas. Embrace the open access movement with confidence, knowing that this checklist is your trusted companion on the journey to securing funding for open access publication.
