

Description

Enago is glad to announce the launch of its Global AI Survey that aims to explore the role and impact of AI technologies and tools on the future of academic publishing.

Artificial intelligence (AI) has immense appeal in the academic industry. State-of-the-art AI-powered tools are making their way to automate arduous and challenging tasks such as content creation, language enhancement, and peer-review. How is AI being used by academic publishers and researchers? Is this technology indeed simplifying human decision-making? Are AI-based tools successfully reducing the time to publication? Are there any concerns or challenges when it comes to adopting such tools? Questions such as these are of interest to everyone in the academic community.

What is the survey about?

- Understanding demographic perspectives about AI (based on region, age group, education, gender)
- Understanding the general perception and awareness about AI
- Understanding the adoption rate and popularity of AI-based tools among academics (researchers, authors, publishers)
- Identifying the perceived benefits, limitations, drawbacks, and concerns related to the use of AI in academic publishing
- Determining if users appreciate the value that AI is delivering or are more concerned about the rise of AI
- Predicting the future of AI in research and publishing

We hope that this survey will stimulate you to think about ways in which AI is re-shaping the academic publishing landscape and the different ways the power of this futuristic technology can be harnessed in a scalable way.
