Theory-practice-theory as advised by Georges Bordage, should be followed by every researcher to ensure the translation of research outcomes into practical implementation benefiting mankind. Enago conducted a series of webinars to facilitate the learning process of clinicians who wish to publish in international medical journals. For up to date clinical care, it is paramount that clinicians rigorously engage in research and disseminate key findings through publications in established journals with global outreach. This introductory session will help researchers understand the basics of writing and publishing in medical research.

Researchers will learn:

- How to start writing—Tips for drafting manuscripts
- Recommendations by the International Committee of Medical Journal Editors (ICMJE)
- Preparing and evaluating case reports
- Medical, Publication, and Research Ethics
- Selecting the right journal and research promotion
