Manuscripts submitted have to undergo several stages of screening — technical, editorial, and peer review — before they finally get published. Ensuring unerring submissions fulfilling journal requirements and smoothly completing the submission process via online systems can be daunting. The Royal Society of Medicine in collaboration with Karger Publishers and Enago conducted an interactive webinar that discussed some top tips for authors on how to avoid making incomplete and incorrect submissions to journals leading to immediate rejection and the importance of publication ethics.

Researchers learnt:

- Identifying the right type of manuscript
- Assigning authorship and contributorship
- Awareness of ethical guidelines that should be considered before submission
- Understanding copyright & licensing
- Choosing the right journal
- Submission methods and requirements
- Information regarding online submission systems

Who Should Attend this Session?

- Early-stage researchers
- Doctoral students
- Postdoctoral Researchers
